

INTELLIGENCE LOG

- From the image, we can see street shops in the Parisian background. Upon zooming in we notice a shop with “Julien/Julien”. Adjacent shops are difficult to make out due to the blur and the outside advertising digital display blocking it.
- Classic Parisian street architecture layout with pedestrian paths and an outside advertising digital display in the background.
- It is currently nighttime, and it has to be between after sunset hours.

Tools Used: Google Search Engine, Google Maps, Google Images, Wikipedia

VISUAL VERIFICATION

Confirmation: When searching ‘Julien’ or ‘Julien’ on Google, there are no matches found for ‘Julien’, but there are at least five matches found for ‘Julien’, which is a series of high-class restaurants. Finding the specific was tricky, so an elimination matrix was used to determine the most likely restaurant and street. Based on the image, context clues, and the requirements, it is the Maison Julien, 73 Avenue Franklin D. Roosevelt. The biggest giveaway was the digital advertising display in the background that matches the one in the image, the pedimented windows on the buildings, the London plane trees (i.e., likely), the crosswalk, and the Parisian bollards.

The nearest Paris Métro station to 73 Avenue Franklin D. Roosevelt is Saint-Philippe du Roule, which is within walking distance of the street.

Flag: ENPM634{SAINT_PHILIPPE_DU_ROULE}